THE PHOTOGRAPH.

My own poor holidays were of the scantiest at the time of this narration.

I had enjoyed my freedom for ten days of June; but, though the period bade fair to live forever in my memory, I seemed to have been already a two-month back at work upon the evening when I found Dick's letter awaiting me at my lodgings:

MY DEAR MORTIMER—I am in town again at last. Arrived last night. Come round and smoke a pipe—tonight if possible. I've a hundred things to tell you. Meanwhile, if you will believe it, I'm engaged. Yours, Dick.

The news he told me was the pleasantest possible; for I also, to tell the truth, had learned in my ten days' freedom how unenviable are the liberties of the more bachelor. I remained free for the present, but I nevertheless hoped to follow his example before the year was out.

One can do a good deal in ten days; indeed I had fallen hopelessly in love in less than that number of hours. But I felt it rather too much to ask that Dick should have recognized and learned to reciprocate my feelings in so short a time, and so I had not spoken. "All the same, I knew that it would be a crushing disappointment to me if she had not accomplished it. Her home was at Brighton, she once told me, and she well knew my friends, the Meynells.

For Dick—I could find no words to express her. I put my hand into the breast pocket of my coat and drew out a photograph. It was not a very good likeness; the hair was not dressed in the fashion which had become familiar to me, and that fashion, of a surety, was the most charming that ever occurred to the mind of ingenious woman. But still the picture had enough of her to be for me the most beautiful thing in the world, save only her sweet self. I had stolen it. She was stopping with the Luttrells, with whom I spent my holiday at Sandbyr, and Madge Luttrell was a great friend of mine. She had detected or foreseen my devotion to Dick, I think, even before it revealed itself to me. At any rate, I knew she would be discreet, and, trusting to her clemency, I had stolen the precious photograph out of her album upon the morning when I left Sandbyr.

I had seen finished the meal which stood ready for me and from which I had been kept by Dick's note and by the emotions resulting from its perusal. Then I found my hat and stick and my very largest pipe and set out across London to Dick's rooms. The place was in darkness and untenanted when I entered, but I knew that he would not fail me and struck a match to discover if he had left a note to tell me when he would return. "Back at 8," it read. "Meanwhile, there's honey and a new Stevenson."

It was now upon the stroke of 7, so I lit the lamp, found Stevenson and prepared to spend an hour pleasantly. The three passed most happily. At last I laid aside the book and filled my pipe. I walked across the room to take a spill from the mantelshelf and in a moment found myself gazing at the photograph of Madge Luttrell—the girl I loved, the girl I hoped to marry.

It was in a frame of elaborately beaten silver, already somewhat tarnished by tobacco smoke, and beyond a doubt was a portrait of Dick's fiancée.

I turned away from the mantel—her face looked forth upon me like a stranger's out of that frame—and took my copy of her photograph from my pocket. I laid it upon the table in the full light of the lamp. It had not all her beauty; her loveliness was half of ever-changing expression, and so must needs escape the camera. But still the picture gave the lie to all the overwhelming evidence which had crushed my faith in her. For a moment I was content. He might account himself master of her love; might, if it pleased him, believe that no man disputed with him the kingdom of her heart. For a moment, despite all evidence, I believed that she was still true to the unspoken fact between us, that she could not betray me.

There was a sudden sound of footsteps on the stairs, a hand upon the door, and even as I thrust back her photograph into my pocket the door opened and Dick entered.

"Hope you've not had long to wait," he said. "I had to be out for awhile."

"Not long," I answered. "And now, I suppose, I must congratulate you?"

Dick laughed. "Do you only suppose? I am the luckiest beggar in the world. But, never mind, you will see her some day, and then you will speak differently. You will envy me, madly, for indeed—But we'll wait until you have met her. Only I promise you you may safely venture your congratulations. Here is her photograph, by the way, a wretchedly bad one, but still not all unlike."

He moved to the mantel and handed me her picture, inclosed in that abominable frame of his. I took it from him, and for a minute and more gazed hard upon her face.

"It is all true," I kept whispering to myself. "She has betrayed me."

Dick watched me in silence, evidently convinced of my admiration. In reality I was wondering whether it would be better to tell him that we had met.

Presently he broke silence. "Well," he said, holding out his hand for the return of her photograph.

"You are lucky," I answered slowly. "She is very beautiful."

"Aye," he said contentedly, "but you don't know how beautiful that photograph is a life!"

He put it back upon the mantelshelf and selected a pipe. Then he stretched himself in an easy chair.

"You two must know one another—indeed she is already eager for your acquaintance."

I was steeled, I thought, against all that he could tell me, but upon this I well might betray myself. Had she admitted that her fancy for me—I knew that she did come near loving me—was dead, I could have borne my burden uncomplainingly and might have forgotten. But that she should deny that it

CRAWFISHING.

How the Ugly but Toothsome Creatures Are Caught.

Mr. A. Ulrich of Chicago, who once lived in New Orleans and is familiar with the matter of which he speaks, sends in the following very interesting account of the way in which crawfish are taken by the men who fish for them. He says:

"Around New Orleans there are swamps which are always being hunted for crawfish, and yet the supply is unlimited. So numerous are they that one cannot leave fish on a string in the water, for they will tear the fish into shreds."

"A small net about the size of a butterfly net, about ten cords, each two feet long, and 5 cents' worth of meat complete the outfit for one person."

"In the swamp there are small islands and long necks of land which intersect one another in all directions and upon which the catchers go."

"The start is usually made in the early morning, when the sun does not shine so. Heavily and walking is much easier."

"Arriving at their destination, they cut their meat into small pieces about two inches around. Each piece is now attached to one of the cords. After this they are thrown into the water, and the other end of the cord is attached to a stick which is stuck into the ground so that the crawfish cannot pull the meat away. One usually waits a few minutes, and then when the cord is gently raised the catcher will see about half a dozen crawfish with their plumpers stuck into the meat, eating ravenously."

"The net is now gently put into the water directly under them, and with a sudden jerk they are landed, for as soon as they strike the air they will let loose of the meat."

"The crawfish are of a large species. The writer has caught some measuring 10 inches from tip to tip. These are by no means uncommon."

"The average catch for three persons is about an ordinary bucketful. The meat when prepared right makes a delicious delicacy."—Forest and Stream.

How Lover Worked.

Samuel Lover's daughter, Mrs. Fanny Schmid, writes her recollections of "The Author of 'Rory O'More'" for The Century. Mrs. Schmid says: His industry was such that in the busiest years of his life he did not even grant himself time to look at the daily papers, or to read any new book that was much talked of. His wife always read the papers and the new books for him, giving him, in conversation, a summary of the news of the day and the contents of the books, so that he was always well informed of everything that was going on. If anything exceedingly important was on hand in the political world, or if any part of a book was particularly interesting or well written, these he would read to him while he was painting.

Many artists are as dumb as fishes at their canvases, but he could converse charmingly while he was painting, which was a particularly pleasant quality for his sisters. In painting or in writing he worked indefatigably, and seemed to be independent of the "moods" to which many artists appear to be victims. As to his songs, he used to say himself that he never wrote a song in his life except when he couldn't help it.

The songs used to "come to him" generally words and melody simultaneously, so that he had only to write them down. Frequently the idea of a song would come upon him as he was occupied with something quite different, as, for instance, while painting. He would then leave his canvas, write down the idea and return to his work. Afterward he would return to the idea and work it out.

Her Tribute to Lucy Stone.

Mrs. Mary E. Holmes, the faithful and efficient president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage association, has been obliged by domestic cares and duties to resign her official position. She will be greatly missed, but will continue to advise and plan for the cause. In a private letter she writes:

"If dear Lucy Stone was on the earth, I should explain to her first of all why I have resigned my state position. She was and is my inspiration and god-mother in suffrage work. She was such a good wife and mother that I feel sure she would tell me to do my duty to the home before any other. I hope I can return to the work at some future time, but now heart and brain must be given to the home and home interests. I shall still greatly love to see for our beloved cause and to watch the battle with great interest."

THE GOLD RESERVE.

It is a useless ornament and should be abolished.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—A little more than thirty-five years ago, gold was withdrawn from circulation and the producers of the United States were left without a medium of exchange. What did Uncle Sam do in this dilemma? Did he try to borrow the gold that had deserted the people in the hour of trouble? No, he suspended specie payments and issued fiat money. True, the bankers of the Eastern cities, by a stupendous effort, got an exception clause inserted on this money, which made it necessary for the importers to procure gold to pay the duties on imports. The bankers also provided a way to get the gold back again, by making the interest on the public debt payable in coin. The bankers having a corner on gold would charge the importers an exorbitant price for the gold and as soon as the importer paid it to the Government, it would be immediately returned to the banker for interest on his bonds and was again ready for sale to the importer. The banker kept exchanging his greenbacks for bonds and thus the gold kept circulating between the bond holder and importer, with the bond holder gorging himself with plunder.

Mr. Editor, that is the way the bond holder came to the rescue of this country during its hour of peril. Now let us see how they saved the country after the war was over. In 1865, these patriotic bond holders by another stupendous effort succeeded in getting the Contract Act through Congress. This was for the purpose of replacing the paper currency with bonds. This did not satiate the thirst of the bond holders for plunder, and in 1869 by another huge effort they succeeded in steering the credit strengthening act through Congress. This made the bonds which were bought by the bond holders with greenbacks, payable in coin.

By 1873, the bond holders' thirst for more plunder had become so great that they demonetized silver, and in 1875 they had congress well in hand and stored the Resumption Act through. Since January, 1879, the United States Treasury has been ornamented with a gold reserve. This useless ornament has been purchased at a fearful cost. The tens of millions of bankrupts, tramps and indigents, who exist in the United States, are living evidence of the thieving financial legislation of the past thirty-five years. With such a record of legislation it is with wonder that the property of the United States, assessed at twenty-five billion of dollars should be burdened with forty billion dollars of debt?

The next move of the bond holders is to retire the greenbacks, treasury notes and silver currency, and fleece the producers out of the little portable property still in their possession.

RENO, MARCH 26, 1897.

Local Officers Should Receive Credit Due.

Now that the excitement attendant on the prize fight has about died out and a proper time has been allowed for the riff-raff, hobos and followers at such affairs to have gotten out of the country, it is but fair to credit the peace officers, both county and municipal, for the prompt and efficient means used to protect the crowds of people passing through Reno, as well as the residents and property of the town. With all the speculation and anticipation which no doubt passed through seriously from the questionable element which no doubt passed through and remained for a time at this point, there was no crime committed of a serious nature. It is true that a pocket or two was picked, but that might have occurred at any time. Further than this, there was nothing of consequence, and the hobo population, was not materially increased at the county jail.

Sheriff McInnis and his deputies, as well as Constable McNeilly and his force, also Officer Nash are deserving of great credit, and the ten day's hubbub previous to and following the contest caused comparatively little cost to the county or town. Every indication of a row or any disorder was checked at once and the pickpockets, petty thieves, etc., found the town an unpleasant place to work their game, while the hobos were "pushed along" as rapidly as circumstances would permit. T. V. Julien, District Attorney, is also entitled to great credit in enforcing the law regarding the exhibitions as well as nickel-in-the-slot machines and other games. All in all the officers did their work well and should receive the proper praise therefor.

WEATHER BULLETIN.

(Copyright, 1896, by W. T. Foster.)

St. Joseph, Mo., Mar. 27.—My last bulletin gave forecast of the storm wave to cross the continent from the 30th to April 8d and the next will reach the Pacific Coast about the 4th, cross the west of Rockies country by the close of the 5th, great central valleys 6th to 8th, and Eastern States April 9th.

Warm wave will cross the west of Rockies country about the 4th, great central valleys 6th, Eastern States April 8th. Cool wave will cross the west of Rockies country about April 7th, great central valleys 9th and Eastern States 11th.

Temperature of the week ending April 8d, will be about or a little above normal, and rainfall, principally during the last days of March, about normal. The third disturbance in April will reach the Pacific Coast about the 10th, cross the west of Rockies country by close of the 11th, great central valleys 12th to 14th, Eastern States 15th.

Warm wave will cross the west of Rockies country about the 10th, great central valleys 12th, Eastern States 14th. Cool wave will cross the west of Rockies country about 13th, great central valleys 15th, Eastern States 17th. In the highlands of the western Rocky Mountain countries, temperatures will average below and rainfall will be above normal. This will be encouraging to agriculture in those sections but may cause floods in May and June in the Missouri River.

Prosperity for Tuscarora.

A few strikes such as that which has been registered at the Dexter Mining Company's property, and Tuscarora, like many of the old camps in the west, will have awakened to new life.

Recently the exploration of a virgin strip between two points in the Dexter to which the work had been carried was commenced. A few days ago information came to the city that sensational disclosures had been made upon the interlying strip, particulars have been awaited with great impatience by all interested. Yesterday Judge Dickinson, who has been looking at the ground, released them. He says that in the strip there has been exposed ten inches of ore of the value of $40 a pound, while this is margined by ore that yields handsome profit in the mill. The vein has been stripped for twenty feet and at this time everything indicates that the chute is a continuous one. The sacking of the high grade has commenced and a shipment will be made in a short time. Things are being put in shape to resume work on the Nevada Queen.—Wadsworth Dispatch.

Chas. B. Hood, Broker and Manufacturers Agent, Columbus, Ohio, certifies that Dr. King's New Discovery has no equal as a cough remedy. J. D. Brown, proprietor of St. James Hotel, Fort Wayne, Ind., testifies that he was cured of a cough of two years standing, caused by La Grippe, by Dr. King's New Discovery. B. F. Merrill, Baldwinville, Mass., says that he has used and recommended it and never knew it to fail, and would rather have it than any doctor, because it always cures. Mrs. Hemming, 222 E. 25th street, Chicago, always keeps it at hand and has no fear of croup because it instantly relieves. Free trial bottles at S. J. Hodgkinson's drug store.

Diphtheria Cure.

The testimony of a prominent physician: FOUNTAIN CITY, Ind., June 17, 1895. This certifies that I have been using V. O. in my practice. I have never found any medical preparation in 46 years of practice that is calculated to do so much good in so wide a range of diseases and leave no after bad effects. In Diphtheria it has proved a perfect specific in my hands, and I had rather depend on it alone in that dreadful disease than the whole popular Materia Medica with that left out.

The San Francisco Chronicle announces the possibility of a combination being formed to pull off future prizefights in Reno. Whether it is a proposition to gain a little free advertising or not the JOURNAL is not informed and is somewhat on the outside, but it is known that there are some dead game sports in town and there is a strong probability that they could raise a $20,000 purse.

The Viavi Cause.

It is impossible to take Viavi into the system without benefit. It is purely vegetable and as a nerve and tissue builder has no equal. It can be used with perfect safety by the most delicate, and is used upon the smallest children.

Patrons of the remedy can consult our physicians free of charge. I will take pleasure in explaining its various uses to all who may call.
